1972 to 1974
ASSOCIATE - Debevoise, Plimpton, Lyons and Gates, New York City.

1971
LEGAL CLERK - Cravath, Swaine and Moore, New York City.

Professional experience

- Direct and supervise the Law Group staff of over 100 employees engaged in human rights litigation, advocacy and training activities in Asia, Africa, Latin America and eastern Europe.

- Direct the four components of the Law Group's programme: the Empowerment Project, which seeks to train, collaborate with and empower grass-roots human rights advocates in developing countries; the Rule of Law Program, which provides technical assistance to strengthen legal systems in developing countries and emerging democracies to enforce human rights; the International Advocacy Project, which works to strengthen United States and international mechanisms for redressing human rights abuses, and seeks to focus international attention on human rights and development; and the Women's Rights Advocacy Project, which works to promote women's human rights through legal and political initiatives in the United Nations and regional human rights systems.

- Organized and directed the defence of thousands of political prisoners and detainees in South Africa and Namibia, raising more than $1.2 million annually from United States foundations, the United Nations (UN) and European donors to finance the programme of the Southern Africa Project.

- Organized six-part series of international conferences on constitutional options for a post-apartheid South Africa. The conferences, held in South Africa, focused on reorganizing the judiciary; adopting a bill of rights; developing affirmative action programmes; designing a nationwide public defender service; comparing institutional models for enforcing a constitutional guarantee of gender equality, and evaluating electoral systems.

- Coordinated nationwide campaigns to lobby the Congress and Executive Branch on matters related to United States foreign policy in southern Africa.

- Established the Commission on Independence for Namibia, a bipartisan group of 31 distinguished Americans that monitored the UN-supervised, year-long process leading to elections in Namibia. The Commission succeeded in compelling the modification of such critical legislation as the registration and election law, which, as drafted, threatened the fairness of the election process, analysed proposed provisions of the new Constitution; consulted with United Nations officials, the South African administration and civic leaders; published and distributed worldwide the only weekly reports on the transition process, and reported frequently to the United Nations Secretary-General.

- Recruited and coordinated the pro-bono services of attorneys from major corporate firms to handle or join as amici in human rights-related litigation in the United States courts.

- Recruited, and facilitated visits to South Africa of, prestigious members of the American judiciary and bar to serve as observers at important political trials.

- Lectured extensively on human rights and southern African issues in the United States at universities, law schools, national and international conferences sponsored by United Nations agencies, civic and professional organizations.

- Featured in guest appearances on numerous television and radio programmes.

Academic qualifications

Educated in the Sudan up to university level. Graduated from the University College of Khartoum in 1952 and acquired a diploma in Law. Had his post-graduate education in the United Kingdom, first in the London School of Economics and Political Science (London University) where he studied Constitutional Law, Government and Politics in 1963/64. He then went to Oxford University to read for a Doctor of Philosophy degree. In 1973 he was awarded that degree in Government and Constitutional Law by Oxford University.

Practical experience

He worked as a district judge in the Sudan for four years after which he resigned and practised as an advocate in Port Sudan, and later in Khartoum. He went to Kuwait in 1973 and practised as a licensed advocate for one year after which he joined the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development (a multilateral organization of Arab States with headquarters in Kuwait) where he worked for five years. He then resigned, returned to the Sudan in 1978 and joined the Arab Authority for Investment and Agricultural Development (a multilateral organization of Arab States with headquarters in Khartoum).

He played an active role in Sudanese politics. He was twice elected member of Parliament and served for five years. He was appointed a Cabinet minister three times between 1966 and 1988, first as Minister of Justice and majority leader in Parliament in 1966/67, then Minister of Culture and Information in 1987 and Minister for Foreign Affairs in 1987/88.

At present, he is a legal consultant in the law firm of Mamoun Sinada and Mubarak Imam, Advocates and Commissioners for Oaths, in Khartoum. He is a member of the International Bar Association.

He has written two books not yet published, one in English entitled The Independence of the Sudan: A Study of British Rule, Self-Government, and Self-Determination, the second, in Arabic, is his memoirs. He has written many articles in the Arabic press in Khartoum on various topics.

He is currently engaged in philanthropic societies in the Sudan, particularly educational and social work foundations.
